Question number	Answer
2	4 marks AO1, 8 marks AO2 AO1 will be used by candidates to underpin their analysis and evaluation. Candidates will be required to demonstrate knowledge and understanding when responding to the question, and in meeting AO2 descriptors described below. Candidates may refer to the following in relation to AO1. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Religious teaching has historically provided a foundation for secular moral codes. • Biblical narrative and religious teaching offer clear examples of how religion is used to advise and enforce morality. • God may be understood as the ground of morality and hence religious teaching has a responsibility to make God's moral law known. AO2 requires candidates to develop their answers showing analytical and evaluative skills to address the question. Such responses will be underpinned by their use of knowledge and understanding. Candidates may refer to the following in relation to AO2. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Religious moral teaching is invariably based on sacred texts and therefore requires considerable interpretation to extract its relevance to modern moral situations. • Religious morality is diverse and divisive and therefore presents problems for objective moral decision-making. • Examples of religious morality may be counter-intuitive and therefore may reinforce a view that is offensive to modern secular moral culture. • The Euthyphro Dilemma raises the problem of whether God commands what is good independently of his nature, therefore raising the question of how far God may be the ground of moral values. Candidates who show achievement only against AO1 will not be able to gain marks beyond the top of Level 1.

Such responses will be underpinned by their use of knowledge and understanding. Candidates may refer to the following in relation to AO2. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Virtue Ethics may be considered weak because it lacks a set of rules on which to develop morality. • Virtues are not always universal, since they can be culturally relative or no longer appropriate in the modern world. • Deontology may be more persuasive as it appeals to duty which encourages disciplined and universal ethical behaviour. • Utilitarianism may be more persuasive as it appeals to the well being of the majority irrespective of moral character. • Situation Ethics may be more persuasive as agape love is more easily grasped as a universal ideal and can also contribute to the development of moral character. • However, Virtue Ethics can be applied from a religious or secular perspective, and could be perceived as good for the development of a community based on a shared understanding of moral character. Candidates who show achievement only against AO1 will not be able to gain marks beyond the top of Level 1.

4	5 marks AO1, 25 marks AO2 AO1 will be used by candidates to underpin their analysis and evaluation. Candidates will be required to demonstrate knowledge and understanding using specialist language and terminology when responding to the question, and in meeting AO2 descriptors described below. Candidates may refer to the following in relation to AO1. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Environmental ethics provides an important focus in the modern world to issues including climate change, pollution, loss of habitat and animal welfare. • Religious teachings have traditionally played a significant role in guiding religious communities in caring for the natural world. • Secular principles have also played a major part in developing legal and ethical codes which govern environmental practices. AO2 requires candidates to develop their answers showing analytical and evaluative skills to address the question. Such responses will be underpinned by their use of knowledge and understanding. Candidates may refer to the following in relation to AO2. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The appeal to religious teachings may be important when making decisions about the natural world because they lay out principles regarding the nature of God's creation which may be considered absolute. • Appeal to secular principles alone may be deemed unreliable because the instrumental value of the natural world is likely to be placed above its intrinsic worth and thus encourage practices which undermine the environment. • Religious teachings have stood the test of time because they have proved their flexibility through creative applications such as Situation Ethics, so religious teachings about the natural world can be applied in a new framework and support secular approaches. • Appeal to religious teachings may be deemed unhelpful because scientific progress has outstripped their relevance and religious teachings offer solutions which have no objective value to the complex issues of the modern world. • Developments in environmental science may be motivated by selfish ends, for example, financial gain or social engineering, which religious teaching would recognise as inappropriate. • Many religious traditions believe in life after death which may influence beliefs about environmental ethics (this shows links to the Philosophy of Religion) and therefore encourage an element of subjective judgment, and even fear of the unknown after death, to enter the decision making process. • Religious teachings based on biblical principles (thus linking with New Testament Studies) are deemed inherently reliable and therefore, for some, provide the most trustworthy guidance, irrespective of changes in moral climate or scientific understanding of the natural world. • Religious teachings concerning the natural world may be manipulated by religious teachers for their own purposes or to enforce attachment to the moral view of a particular religious system, thus they can be used to instil fear rather than encouraging a rational approach to difficult decisions (thus shows links to Study of Religion). Candidates who show achievement only against AO1 will not be able to gain marks beyond the top of Level 1.
