Jack Wills Ltd to reconsider its future

In 2019, fashion retailer, Jack Wills, appointed advisors to look at options for the future of the business. This included the possible sale of the business. Since 2017, the retailer has suffered from falling sales and has used up a £20m cash injection from owners, Bluegem Capital.

5

Rumours suggest that Jack Wills is suffering from poor working capital. It has already asked its landlords to reduce store rental costs in an effort to reduce its fixed costs. Jack Wills' suppliers have also been affected by the problems at the business, with each store reducing the amount of buffer stock held. Suppliers have been asked to extend the trade credit period. Jack Wills has negotiated an increased overdraft facility with its bank, HSBC.

10

Jack Wills was not the only retailer to face difficulties on the UK high street. In 2019, upmarket retailers Pretty Green and Karen Millen, both failed as high street stores, and continued to lose footfall to online retailers such as Boohoo.com and ASOS.

DJI Ltd expands

DJI Ltd is the world's largest UAV (Unmanned Aerial Vehicle) or 'drone' manufacturer. Based in Shenzhen, China, the company manufacture popular drones, such as the Phantom and Marvic models. In 2016, DJI's global market share stood at 50%. By 2018, this had risen to 76%. Its nearest rival, Yuneec, holds a 5% share of the global market.

5

DJI's success has come from the use of lean production in its factories and by establishing a culture of Kaizen amongst its workforce. As sales of drones have risen, DJI has been able to increase the capacity utilisation at its main Shenzhen factory to over 90%. The company is now planning to open a new factory in California, USA, which it will finance using retained profit.
