SOURCE A

While feeling deeply discontented at having failed to achieve his world ambition, Mao spared no thought for the massive human and material losses that his destructive plans had cost his people. While over 70 million people had died in peacetime as a result of his misrule, Mao felt sorry only for himself. He would cry as he talked about his past glory and current failure, even watching his own regime’s propaganda films.

The author left China after her parents were persecuted and imprisoned despite being loyal Party members.
